

THE HOBBIT

Bilbo Baggins lives a quiet, peaceful life in a cozy hole in the End Bag. Bilbo lives in a hole because he is a hobbit - a small half-human, half-human with fingers and toes and a fondness for good food and drink. Bilbo is very content in Bag End, near the exciting village of Hobbiton, but one day his peace is disturbed by the arrival of the old wizard Gandalf, who wants Bilbo to go on an adventure with a band of thirteen warriors. The Dervish embarked on a great quest to recover their treasure from the robber Smaug, and Bilbo had to act as a "thief". The dervishes are very suspicious of Gandalf's choice of thief, and Bilbo leaves his comfortable life in search of adventure. But Gandalf convinces Bilbo and his friends that there are more hobbits than meets the eye.

Shortly after the group set off, three hungry trolls captured everyone but Gandalf. Gandalf tricks the trolls into staying outside at sunrise and the sunlight turns the night trolls into stone. The team found many weapons in the troll camp. Gandalf and Thorin, the king of knights, took the magic sword, while Bilbo took the small sword.

The group was placed in the elf stronghold of Rivendell, where they sought advice from the high elf lord Elrond, and then traveled through the Misty Mountains. When they take shelter in a cave during a blizzard, they are captured by a group of goblins who live in a cave under a mountain. Dervish Gandalf led the way up the mountain, but accidentally left Bilbo behind.

While wandering through the tunnel, Bilbo found a strange golden ring lying on the ground. He took the ring and put it in his pocket. Soon he meets Gollum, a grunting creature that lives in a cave pool and hunts fish and goblins. I want to eat Bilbo and the two have an argument to determine Bilbo's fate. "What have I got in my pocket?" Bilbo asked, asking for a riddle.

Bilbo wants to eat my hand anyway and disappears to get the magic ring he wears. However, the ring seems to have been found by Bilbo, and Bilbo used it to escape Gollum and the goblins. He finds a tunnel leading out of the mountain and discovers that the dervish and Gandalf have escaped. They are pursued by evil wolves known as wargs, but Bilbo and his companions are helped to safety by a group of great eagles and Beorn, who can change from human to bear.

The company enters the dark forest of Mirkwood, and to make matters worse, Gandalf leaves them on an important mission. In the forest, the dervishes are trapped by some giant snakes and Bilbo has to save them using his sword and magic ring. After Bilbo killed the first deer, he named his sword Sting. Shortly after escaping the cell, the hapless dervish was captured by a group of wood elves who lived near the river that ran through Mirkwood. Bilbo uses the ring to help the company escape and swim across the river, hiding the dervish in a barrel. Dervish arrived in Laketown, a human settlement near a lonely mountain where a great dragon sleeps with Tori's treasure.

After Bilbo enters the mountain, he talks to the cunning dragon Smaug, who unwittingly reveals that the unarmed scale has a weak point in his heart. When Bilbo steals the golden cup from the dragon's lair, Smaug is enraged and flies off the mountain to burn Lake Town. Bard, the heroic archer, learns the secret of Smaug's weakness from the stick and shoots the dragon through the heart, killing him. But Smaug burned the lake city before he died.

The men of Lake City and the elves of Mirkwood climbed the lonely mountain to claim the share of their wealth for their loss and help, but Thorin greedily refused, and men and elves surrounded the mountain, trapping dervishes and goblins. in it. Bilbo goes into hiding to join the humans to bring peace. Thorin was relieved to hear what Bilbo had done, but Gandalf suddenly appeared and saved Bilbo from the dervish's wrath.

At this point, an army of goblins and wargs climbed the mountain, and humans, elves, and dervishes were forced to unite to defeat them. The goblins managed to win, but the arrival of Beorn and the eagle helped the good army win the battle.

After the war, Bilbo and Gandalf returned to Hobbiton, where Bilbo continued to live. He was no longer accepted by respectable hobbit society, but he didn't care. Bilbo now prefers to talk with elves and wizards, and after long and difficult adventures, he is more than happy to be among the familiar comforts of home.
